Ms. Sharma conducted a plethora of activities that got every student up on the stage at least once and brought out latent talent of every student. She told the students that the only way to rid oneself of one's fears is to do it again and again. She encouraged the students to pick up everything good and put it into their "goody bag" on this journey of theirs with her. She taught them the importance of listening and comprehension, the importance of body language and confidence. She distinguished between the different types of orators one comes across and which the students should aspire to be. The students also performed role plays on the topics given to them which was done with superb acting and communication skills. All in all, the workshop was very interactive and everyone had something to relate to and to gain.
