Located in Dwarka, New Delhi, IICC is India's largest convention and exhibition centre. IICC (known as Yashobhoomi) offers a mixed purpose tourism experience with the best location, convenient transportation, as well as various commercial facilities. This place has new station which is designed with three subway: one linking the station to the exhibition halls, convention centre, and its central arena; a second subway to facilitate entry and exit across the Dwarka Expressway; and a third subway establishing a connection between the Metro station and the future exhibition halls' foyer within Yashobhoomi.

Students saw various stalls of goldsmiths, shoemakers, wooden jewellery, decorative materials etc. Exhibition consisted of materials, tools and objects inspired from Indian culture and highlighted the role of Lord Vishwakarma in tool industry, who is a craftsman deity and the divine architect of the devas in contemporary Hinduism.
